

TOO SPECIALIZED

Augustana Professor Says Humanity is Becoming Race of Monstrosities.

TENDENCY IS LIMITATION

People Fail to Develop All of Faculties, and Do Not Examine the Other Side.

"The Other Side of the Question" was the subject of an interesting lecture by Professor A. W. Kjellstrand before the Adolph society of Augustana college, last night. Professor Kjellstrand held that the modern age is fostering a narrow-minded and one-sided policy in the tendency toward specialization in all fields of human thought and effort. The views of men, the speaker declared, should be broadened instead of narrowed.

"Many people of our day," said Professor Kjellstrand, "are afflicted with a certain narrow-minded conservatism which makes it impossible for them to look upon any of life's phenomena from any other point of view than that which their great-grandmothers considered the right one. With their faces turned to the days of hoary antiquity with all its antipathies and superstitions, and with their backs turned to the future of hope and achievement, such persons believe that all who pass them by are going down, not up; backward, not forward along the pathway of life.

"The tendency of our times seems in many respects to lean toward a one-sidedness. The desperate struggle and competition among all classes of society and within every sphere of human effort seems to drive man with a compelling force in this direction. Our age is, therefore, an age of specialists. A certain natural bent or aptitude is fostered and developed at the expense of all other talents to such an extent that if this tendency continues, he who lives 1,000 years from now will see a monstrous sight indeed.

Race of Monstrosities.
"One has so developed his intellect that he is all head, with scarcely enough body for the necessities of life. Another's right arm is larger than his left. A third is all ear. A fourth is all eye. A fifth has the body of a giant, but his head is only as large as a fair-sized goose egg. In a word, humanity has developed into a race of monstrosities."

"The specialization tendency," said the speaker, "is more apparent in the medical field than in any other profession, but is by no means limited to medical doctors. There are also doctors of the various branches of science and learning—of theology, philosophy and law. A similar one-sidedness may be noticed in the common handicrafts of industry."

Grand Law of Nature.

As a matter of self-preservation, the speaker held that everyone should strive for an all-round development.

both physically and mentally. "Development," said he, "is the grand law of nature. If this is checked, you are lost and your life is a failure!"

"Lincoln found relaxation in playing horse with his son, Thad; Gladstone in chopping down trees. The emperor, Charles the Fifth, was an expert watchmaker, and our own Roosevelt is a mighty Nimrod. Why should a shoemaker not be an intelligent lover of music? Why should not the fair pianist with her own nimble fingers be able to serve a juicy beefsteak done to a turn? Is there a well-founded reason why a mechanic should not be well versed in history, mathematics or any other useful science? And can you tell me why a preacher, for instance, should not be able to drive a nail into a wall without striking his thumb?"

Man, said the speaker, was ordained by the Creator to look upon the "other side" of the question. The pessimist should not be too severely criticised for holding his views on life, for life has its dark side as well as its light side. Life's comedy may end in a tragedy in the last act.

On the Other Side.

"Before committing ourselves to any line of action," said Professor Kjellstrand, "we should take a careful survey of the other side of the question. Then will duty and pleasure, work and recreation be merged into a useful life of noble endeavor for truth and justice, for God and humanity."
